

guide to the lower ventura river parkway

The Ventura River Parkway is a network of parks, open space, and trails that provide opportunities for recreation, education and stewardship of the Ventura River.

The Ventura River Trail (1999) and the Ojai Valley Trail (1983) provide a continuous multi-use paved path along the Ventura River corridor from the beach all the way to the City of Ojai. The trail follows the route of the old Southern Pacific Railroad that once transported Ojai Valley produce to Ventura. The 1969 floods washed out much of the tracks, which were later converted from 'Rails to Trails'. Many side trips provide access to the river and creeks as well as scenic overviews of the watershed.

The Ventura River Trail runs from Main St. in Ventura's historic downtown to Foster Park 6.3 miles inland. The trail features the area's natural and industrial heritage, including an impressive wall of sedimentary layers exposed by the Ventura River, active and abandoned industrial sites, and operating oil derricks.

SURFER'S POINT

Just a short distance from Ventura's historic downtown lies the mouth of the Ventura River. The popular Omar Rains bike path fronts the Ventura County Fairgrounds at Surfer's Point. This path was re-routed in 2011 as part of an innovative beach restoration project. Nearby parking provides convenient access to consistent surfing waves.

WILLOUGHBY PRESERVE

A small network of trails on the Ventura Hillside Conservancy (VHC) property provides a unique look at the lower river where it enters the estuary. The rivermouth and estuary provide excellent opportunities for wildlife viewing.

EMMA WOOD STATE BEACH

On the opposite bank of the estuary from Surfer's Point lies the Seaside Wilderness Park/Emma Wood State Beach, providing opportunities for camping, hiking and exploring the river delta's coastal dune habitat. Remnants of a WWII-era artillery gun turret can be found near the rivermouth.

GRANT PARK OVERLOOK

Grant Park lies on the ridge above historic downtown Ventura. The landmark Serra Cross overlooks the San Buenaventura Mission (1782). Although Grant Park is accessible by car, hikers may enjoy the easy switchbacks of the recently constructed Ventura Botanical Gardens Demonstration Trail that climbs the steep grade behind City Hall to the ridgeline above. Here, one gains an expansive overview of the coastline and Channel Islands to the south and the Ventura River watershed and the mountains of the Los Padres National Forest to the north.

FOSTER PARK

Foster Park is the gateway to the Ojai Valley, featuring a linear park along the Ventura River. The park has restrooms, water fountains and parking and is a popular family spot on weekends. This is a destination for cyclists from Ventura, or a good starting point for those wanting to ride the Ojai Valley Trail to Ojai.

MISSION AQUEDUCT

A visible section of the mission aqueduct still exists just east of Highway 33 on Canada Larga Road. It is one of the few remaining parts of a seven mile long system that delivered water from San Antonio Creek to a filtration plant located at Eastwood Park behind the San Buenaventura Mission. The aqueduct was built of river cobblestones and cement by Chumash workers under the direction of mission priests.
